

ROBERT INDIANA

A RETROSPECTIVE: 20 September - 31 October 2013

Robert Indiana is an American artist, the last living legend from the Pop Art movement which included Andy Warhol and Roy Lichtenstein.

Indiana was born Robert Clark in New Castle on September the 13th 1928. One of the preeminent figures of American art since the 1960s, he has been a pioneer of assemblage art, hardedge abstraction and pop art. Over the past fivedecades, Indiana's work has explored the power of abstraction and language, American identity and personal history.

Indiana's works are in the permanent collections of numerous museums including the Museum of Modern Art, New York, the Whitney Museum of American Art, New York and the Metropolitan Museum of Art, New York.

Walton Fine Arts have been major specialists in Robert Indiana's artworks for the past 20 years.

This exhibition, which will run alongside the world's first Indiana retrospective at internationally renowned Whitney Museum of American Art, NYC, brings the iconic works of a legendary master to London, on display and available for purchase to art collectors and lovers.
